emotest degree. One of the most striking and original features of the whole exposition is, probably, the illumination by electricity of the Columbian fountain, with the two large electric fountains on each side of it, having basins sixty feet in diameter and eighteen water jets grouped on the outer edge of the basin, each one throwing a two-inch stream to a height of 150 feet. Then there are inner circles with smaller jets, making a to-tal of 152 streams in each fountain. Now, imagine all of these in full play at once, illuminated by thirty-eight powerful arc lamps, and the water and spray tinted with all the colors of the rainbow; and, besides that, they make regular combinations of set pieces—sheaves of wheat, flowers, showers of pearls and rubles—then they have four great search lights, throwing their powerful, dazzling light over the whole scene, and long rows of incandescent bulbs running clear around the great basin and on the domes and roofs of the great build-ings, so that everything is just flooded with light and all covered over with an immense canopy of rainbows of promise, which, like many other more beautiful things, "tells us of things we have not seen and shall

But of all the hard, trying things one sees here nothing surpasses the poor woman with a baby. It beats Job and Moses clear out of sight. It of it, the woman or the baby.

Here, too, we see the doctrine of the survival of the fittest admirably displayed. Such a worn-out, tired, used-up set of creatures you rarely see. Each one seems to feel that it is a matter of the utmost consequence that he or she should see everything there is in the shortest time ossible; consequently they go as long as they can, then they drop down wherever they are, rest a little, get something to eat, then go ahead again and drop, rest and eat, so that a person in ordinary good health can eat five or six meals a day, and then even he does not feel perfectly satis-fied, as he has to drink much oftener than that; but the Chicago venders seem to have an unlimited supply of everything C. to the board of education about a year ago, and the Faribault plan is at last dead. On October 22, 1891, Father Conroy submitted a proposition to the board of education of Faribault for merging the parochial schools with the public school system.

Father Conroy gave as his reasons for this step the desire that the children then enrolled in the parochial school might receive the benefits that result from an American training in all that word implies, and the custodians of the public schools in Faribault might receive the additional tax from bault might receive the additional tax from the county and state which it would not re-ceive so long as the school was conducted in the interests of the Catholic church.

The board of education accepted the proposition, and the lease was made out for one year for a consideration of $1. Then came the storm from both Protestants and Catholic Cathol Catholicism would be swept from church to school, and that the Faribault plan had for school, and that the Faribault plan had for its object the intermingling of Catholic and Protestant children in places where Catho-lic instruction would prevail, in order that the latter could be wooed from the faith of their forefathers.

It was also said that it was simply an ef-fort of Catholics to get secular as well as non-secular instructions at the expense of the state. Hitherto they had been com-the state. Hitherto they had been com-pelled to pay for the maintenance of their schools, but now the state would have to plan, and it was strongly opposed by Arch-bishop Corrigan of New York. The Catho-lics said that Catholic children would for-get their religious instruction and fall from the arms of the mother church. So hot became the discussion and so fierce cision was meant only for exceptional cases, and that the edict was against the general adoption of this radical departure from es-tablished policy.

The plan in Faribault reached a crisis in July, 1892, when nine of the Protestant teachers resigned, dissatisfied with the workings of the plan.

A month later, however, Faribault voted to continue the plan, and a lease was made for another year. The plan has been working illy, and since then Papal Delegate Satolli has conferred with Archbishop Ireland, and the result of this conference is that Archbishop Ireland ordered Father Conroy to take the step which Thursday gave the death blow to the Faribault plan. The local feeling is that the proper step has been taken, as the sentiment has grown strong that the Catholics favored the Faribault plan because it saved them the expense of supporting the school. Now, however, Cath olic teachers have again been engaged, and the parochial school will again be all that the name implies.

LAW FOR MARRIED WOMEN.

Provisions of a Statute Recently Adopted by the Pennsylvania Legislature. The new married woman's law passed by mighty strides we have taken since that the late legislature of Pennsylvania is deeventful October, 1492. No one could have serving of attention of all having business possibly conceived of it then even in the with that class of persons. It was passed to meet decisions of the courts, which, pursuing their usual custom of very strict constructions on that subject, had largely naturalized the apparent intent of previous legislation as well as to meet the demand for larger freedom over their estates by married women, says the Pittsburg Times. The act provides that maried women may have the same right and power as an unmarried person to acquire, use, lease and dispose of property, but she may not mortgage or convey her real estate unless her husband joins. She may also make any contract in writing or otherwise which is necessarily appropriate, convenient or advantageous to the exercise or enjoyment of her rights of property, but she may not become accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor or surety for another. She may sue and he sued dutilly but she may sue and be sued civilly, but she may not sue her husband except for divorce or to protect or husband except for divorce or to protect or recover her separate property when deserted or refused support, and he may sue her for divorce or to protect or recover his property when deserted by her, but she shall not be arrested for her torts. In suits between husband and wife both shall be competent witnesses, but cannot testify to the confidential communications unless by agreement. She may dispose by will of all her property, but the husband's right as tenant by courtesy shall not be affected. The act by courtesy shall not be affected. The act of June 3,1887, and all other inconsistent acts are repealed by this act, which was ap-proved June 8, 1893.
